1. The first of these is the fact that the majority of the population of the United States is now living in urban areas. This is a result of the process of urbanization, which has been going on since the beginning of the 20th century. The population of the United States has increased from about 100 million in 1900 to over 200 million in 1960. At the same time, the population of rural areas has decreased from about 100 million in 1900 to about 50 million in 1960. This has led to a concentration of the population in urban areas, which has had a number of important consequences. One of the most important is that it has led to a change in the way of life of the majority of the population. In rural areas, the majority of the population was engaged in agriculture, and their way of life was based on the rhythms of the seasons. In urban areas, the majority of the population is engaged in industry or commerce, and their way of life is based on the rhythms of the clock. This has led to a number of changes in the way of life of the majority of the population, including changes in the way of thinking, the way of feeling, and the way of acting. These changes have had a profound impact on the culture of the United States, and they are likely to continue to have a profound impact in the future.
